Foreword

TO RECALL to memory the school activities—scholastic, athletic, and social—that have helped to enliven and brighten the past year; to look backward and to note how far we have progressed on the road to higher learning; to give a clear-cut and accurate picture of our school life in every outstanding phase—these are the aims of

Senior Class History

Four long years ago we, green pirates, left our respective grammar schools to try to ransack the high school until we acquired our treasure chest containing Knowledge. It seems that we did excellent work at first when we forgot to leave our "kiddie-carts" outside and played leap-frog in the halls. We ran everytime we heard a bell, knocking upperclassmen in every direction. We were dumb, we admit, but never think the Sophs let us stay in ignorance long. They made our very lives a misery.

After we had survived our first term test, we took hope, and our pirate ship sailed on. At the end of the year a few had to walk the plank and be left behind. We drifted on for a time, called vacation, then started another year when we were the wisest in the school. We didn't fail to torment the Freshmen either. That was the year of our glorious Sophomore hike when we had so many adventures and so much fun. But even as the best of pirates must, we had to force a part of our crew to walk the plank, leaving still fewer on board.

In all this time we were learning many valuable things along with our fun. Every year we have had many representatives of our class on athletic teams, detention hall, and the honor roll.

The surviving Juniors had part of their life-long dream come true when they got to help with the Junior stand and the Junior-Senior Banquet. Of course, as we are pirates we decorated for the banquet using the pirate scheme. Our Freshmen friends served for us. The Pirate Banquet was the best ever given, so they say; naturally, we agree.

In the Junior year we had to try our luck with geometry, and because of our able instructor most of us got through alive, but Fate ordained a small part of our crew to remain in the Junior class. So again we started on our journey, this time the last sail.

While sailing under the Senior flag (a very fitting name for a dignified crew) many bloody battles had to be fought in order to obtain the treasure chest, which held a diploma for each. Several of the crew had to walk the plank after staying with us for four years.

Now that we have finished our voyage and look back over the four years spent on the ship sailing for the Land of Knowledge, we find that we hate to leave the ship and have the crew separated, but in the years to come may we all have another voyage together, somewhere, sometime, some place.

DORIS BRYAN.

Senior Class Prophecy

I was leaving for a pleasure trip to New York, and the taxi was at the door waiting for me. As I handed my bags to the driver, I recognized my old schoolmate, James Yount. So what did I do but sit in front and talk over old times with him when we were in old H. H. S. ten years ago?

"I work for 'Fresh Air Taxi Cab Co.'," explained James. "Alfred Gilbert and D. G. Rowe own it."

I bought my ticket at the station from my old friend, Russell Robinson, who was working his way around the world. Hurrying on to the train I saw that Aubrey Poovey was the engineer, so I felt a trifle uneasy, but the conductor, Charles Mosteller, assured me that it was quite safe.

The train was so crowded that I had to sit with a young woman, who was trying to make her triplets behave. We recognized each other at the same time.

"Well, Mary Frances Bagby," I shrieked.

I found out that she had married a well known life saver five years before, and was on her way to visit her mother-in-law. Upon inquiry, I found that she had named her triplets for her old high school friends.

"I named this one for Hazel Sides, who is now in South America running a beauty shop for the natives. The other girl I named for Wilda Sigmon, and by the way, she is a nurse in Conover. Then the boy was so adorable I simply had to name him for Jimmie Sullivan. He runs Hank's Hash House, you know. Have you heard about Helen Abernethy and Virginia Bailey going into a detective agency together?" As she got off at the next stop we said good-by with heavy hearts.

I bought a magazine and newspaper to read the rest of the way. "Why look who's editor of this magazine," I thought as I saw William Abernethy's name. The first thing I saw in the newspaper was huge head lines, "Mayo Hefuer Invents Car That Will Run Without Gas." It was a very interesting article written by Irene Shouse, a reporter on the paper. Two other reporters were old schoolmates of mine; Frederick Poovey was sports editor and Donnie Hudson was society editor.

Miss Hudson had written up an account of Miss Marjorie Lohr's marriage to a wealthy French Count. Her charming sister, formerly Miss Bebe Lohr, was matron of honor, and lovely Miss Margaret Lentz, who had just returned from abroad, was maid-of-honor. The wedding dresses were designed by Ida Frances Creech, the first she had made after completing her course in Paris.

In the sports column I saw something which I had been expecting for a long time. John Mackorell had been chosen football coach at Notre Dame.

I noticed where the professor of mathematics of Yale University, Nathan Hovis, was to lecture to a body of Chinese laundry workers on "The Science of Algebra." That was too much news for me, so I turned to my magazine only to notice it was published by Clara Hunsucker. The first article was on "The Proper Way to Reduce," by Bernice Phillips. Seeing a picture which looked faintly familiar, I found out that it was Glenn Brown, the poor boy having taken an over-dose of Ida Mae Whitener's Reduce Quick Pills. So now Mr. Brown only weighed one hundred and three pounds. Another article of interest was written by Idabel Regan about Edith Setzer, who had spent the last three years in Rome studying Latin.

I got off the train and went to Hotel Couch, owned by Dexter Couch. I immediately had to make a complaint to the manager, Walter Wooten, about the mud in my room, but it was all explained when I found that Vashti Whitener was the maid.

When I went down to dinner that night, I rode on the elevator with Virginia Mitchell, who was on her way to enter a nunnery. Hotel Couch had excellent service. While I was finishing dinner, a traveling salesman, Woodrow Burns, sold me some life insurance.

I had to rush to get to the theatre on time that evening. I bought my ticket from Ruby Hart. She informed me that she was married to a lawyer, who was working on a case for Margaret Pope. Margaret was suing her husband for alimony. I had only time to learn that James Stevenson owned the theatre and that Ben Jones had decided to become his partner. I had to rush on as I was keeping many people from buying tickets.

There was a special program that evening, Richard Whitener, the usher, told me as he seated me next to Fay Phillips. Fay was there on her honeymoon. I glanced over my program and saw that it was published by James Miller, the publisher of New York Times. The costumes were designed by Edna Rogers and made by Edith Brown, so they were indeed beautiful.

The excellent orchestra had several players of interest to me. The organist was Helen Warlick and the violinist was Vera Shuford. They played a piece composed by Frances Stevens, then in Germany studying music.

The first number was by the grand opera singer, Virginia Herman. She sang beautifully and was encored several times. I glanced around and saw William Setzer, a heavyweight boxer, send her a large bouquet of flowers. A baritone solo followed by Donnell Warlick. I heard whispered all around that he was going to start broadcasting soon. The next number was a solo dance by Rachel Barger. Mary Alice Coyle, known as "Mac," the national blonde beauty, appeared in person for the last number on the program.

I hurried out and ordered my taxi driver to take me down to the stage entrance, as I wanted a chance to speak to my famous friends. I saw a policeman, George Huffman, rush up and separate Archie Shuford and William Moretz. They were fighting over a date with "Mac." That sounded rather natural, so I drove on.

I went on back to Hotel Couch and turned on the radio in my room just as Ernest Bolick announced that Katherine Stine, Irene Abernethy and Kathryn Miller were the only survivors of a fire in an eighty-three story building, built by Howard Frye. They were on the top story and saved themselves by using a new kind of parachute invented by Scott Hanna. Mr. Bolick went on to tell about each young woman. It seems that Miss Stine had inherited several million dollars and was on a pleasure trip. Miss Abernethy was in New York manufacturing wigs, while Miss Miller was a basketball coach in one of the large colleges.

Early the next morning I went to the beauty shop. I found that Mildred Frye owned the shop, so of course I asked to see her, but her assistant, Grace Miller, told me that Miss Frye was lifting the president's wife's face, formerly Dorothy Fritz. I rushed in to see my two old friends. Dorothy was on her way to have lunch with Juanita Brittain, the wife of the ambassador to Ireland. After I had my hair dyed, I went to the harbor to see a new ship, "Red Tornado," sail. This ship was built by Albert Deal, internationally known as the designer and builder of the fastest ocean liners.

I was in hopes of seeing one of my former classmates, but instead I saw two very dignified men approaching. As I watched them, I suddenly recognized Nevette Carpenter and Forrest Short. Of course we had quite a little chat. They were on their way to Africa to be foreign missionaries.

After the ship sailed I went to visit one of the large women's colleges. I was allowed to see the president, Ruth Bisanar, who had been there three years and had written several books.

That night I went to a night club with Ruth Reed, who was staying at the Couch Hotel while she attended a Sunday School convention. To my utmost surprise I found Freda Yount as hostess, and Lucille Timmie was in the dancing chorus. On the way back to my hotel we collided with a Rolls Royce, driven by Avis Throneburg. She was with Harry Teague, who had recently joined the Hollywood movies as a tap dancer. They were on their way to Rosa Lee Sherrill's dinner party. Miss Sherrill was to leave the next day to tour the world in an aeroplane that Deems Sherrill had built. Mr. Sherrill had acquired a fortune from manufacturing aeroplanes.

The next morning I woke up with a terrible toothache, so I hurried to the nearest dentist, who happened to be Homer Eckard. Just as I was leaving, I walked Neill Clark. He was selling false teeth, as he had made a failure of running a hot dog stand.

The morning was lovely so I took a walk in a park near the hotel. As I was walking along I saw Dorothy Huffman driving a new Ford. She was looking extremely happy, as she was with her husband and her eleven children. As I walked on through the park, I heard a great deal of shouting. I hurried to see what it was, but I could hardly see for the large crowd. I got up closer and saw A. J. Cox making a stump speech for himself. He was running on a wet ticket for president. Standing next to him was Einstein. I got a chance to talk to him. He told me that he was going to leave his works to David Lee Smith. Einstein said that David was the only one who had ability enough to carry on his great projects.

Walking by a church I decided to go in, as I was very tired and had a cinder in my shoe. Opening the door and entering I was very surprised to see that a wedding was taking place. I heard the girl say, "I do." "Mary Hawn," I thought, and sure enough it was Mary and her aviator friend.

I sat down in the corner, and I don't think I was seen because there were only a few people there. "Where have I heard that voice before?" I thought, as I listened to the service. It suddenly dawned upon me that it was W. J. Troutman. Yes, it was still the freckled-faced boy who used to make so many wise-cracks. I left before the service was over because I heard someone shout "Fire." When I got outside I only saw a little boy running over the lawn with a well-dressed lady chasing him. The little boy dashed at me, so I held him until his breathless mother came up.

"Hello, Doris Bryan," she said.

"Well, if it isn't Margaret Cloninger."

Margaret told me that she had been married nine years. She had married a well known Hickory boy the year after she graduated from high school.

It was lunch time when I got back to my hotel. I decided to go have lunch at the Knox-Bostic Lunch Room, which was owned by Martha Knox and Gladys Bostic. They were both there, so I talked with them while I ate lunch. Neither one had married, and both said they were men-haters. But let me say here that one month later Martha Knox eloped with a street sweeper.

I walked out of the lunch room and on up the street. I heard a lot of loud talking. To my surprise, I saw John Harris, prominent preacher, and John DeLane heatedly talking. I found out that Mr. DeLane had been flirting scandalously with Mr. Harris' wife. Miss Gertrude Herman came up about that time and said he had annoyed her a great many times with his flirtations. Well, John was always noted for his forward ways, but I never thought he'd come to this.

Those were very exciting days on my New York trip. I went home with a happy heart, after having seen so many of my old schoolmates.

Junior Class History

In September of the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and twenty-eight, the present Junior class of girls and boys entered upon their High School career at dear old Hickory High. We were easily distinguishable as Freshman by our green acts, but soon became acclimated to the surroundings. This was due to our being guided by our most beloved (?) teachers. By the end of the year we were not only taking care of ourselves, but aided the Juniors and Seniors by serving for them at their banquets.

The following year most all of the class bloomed out as wise and irresponsible Sophomores. We certainly taught the Freshman what was what.

The class returned for their third time and the cares of our studies were beginning to fall heavily on our shoulders. We were extremely fortunate in having two strong faculty advisors—Miss Barron and Mr. Boyden. Under their leadership we expect our Junior-Senior Banquet to be the most outstanding event ever experienced in the history of this high school.

In this brief history I have endeavored to express the spirit of the Junior Class of 1931. May we always be known as the class who had to be shown.

MARY SHUFORD.

Sophomore Class History

In the fall of 1929 about a hundred and fifty odd youngsters from all parts of Greater Hickory were admitted into the classic halls of old H. H. S. for the purpose of getting as much learning into their heads as they could absorb in four years' time. This band of boys and girls was the Freshman class of 1929-'30, now the Sophomores of 1930-'31, whose histories you will now hear. We, for I speak as one of them, wandered around forlornly for a while, going up the wrong stairways, getting into the wrong classrooms, being initiated by the Sophomores, and getting into trouble everywhere. Soon, however, we became accustomed to our new surroundings.

Some went out for football, basketball, and other sports and did their part to build these teams up to their present high standings. Others sat on the sidelines and cheered lustily, and, if we sometimes yelled at the wrong time or made similar mistakes, it was because we were still "Frosh" and knew no better.

As we all studied very, very hard, and were very nice to our teachers, they did their part by us and advanced most of us to the ninth grade. These favored ones, together with a few of the unfavored "Sophs" of last year, who waited for us, now form the Sophomore class of 1931. We have fitted in well in this new berth and are doing all the things which have characterized members of this class since time began, such as making fun of the mistakes of the Freshmen, hazing them, passing notes and trying to act like we were at least a little smarter and older than the Freshmen. However, we have our more serious thoughts, too. A large number of our class have entered into the various sports and other activities of our school and a good percentage of the honor roll every month is made up of Sophomores. At all times our class has plunged into things with a vim, even though sometimes it was trouble we plunged into. Pep, dependability, and good scholarship mark the class of '33 and you may look to us for great things in the future.

Freshman Class History

All Freshmen are very green when they first enter high school, and we were no exception to the rule. Our greatest difficulties were getting used to the schedule and finding our way to our classes. At the end of the first term some of the Freshman boys made the football squad and did well for their first season out. When the school year ended we Freshman found that we had grown to like high school very much and we're looking forward to the coming years.

The Hi-Y Club of 1930-'31 has been one of the best in recent years. Although it had a membership of only fifty, these boys were faithful in attending the meetings.

We will venture to say that every boy was benefited morally and spiritually. Each boy was taught to pray and to give prayer among his fellow members. The organization has accomplished great good by setting up high standards and teaching the true value of constructive Christian character.

Junior-Senior Banquet

At the Hickory High School on May 2, 1930, the annual Junior-Senior Banquet was held. As the pirate scheme was carried out, the hall represented a ship with the hosts and guests walking up a gangplank to enter. The hall was piratically decorated in red and black streamers. Tall red candles, which lighted the table, shone on miniature pirate ships and treasure chests. When these treasure chests were opened, those things dearly beloved by pirates—skeletons, daggers, small chests containing hidden money, and bags of silver nuggets—were found. Freshmen girls dressed as pirates served the food, which further carried out the idea of piracy.

Athletic Banquet

An affair which is always looked forward to at the end of the baseball season is the Athletic Banquet that is given for the letter girls and letter men in the various sports—football, baseball, basketball, and track. The banquet for 1930 was held on May 23 at the Hickory High School cafeteria, which was decorated with the school colors, garnet and gold. Dr. J. H. Shuford acted as toastmaster. Coach Younger introduced the guest speaker, Captain Pritchett. Baxter Williams entertained everyone with his singing. Before the close of the evening the captains, coaches, and managers of all the sports gave short talks.

Football

Fifty-six young cohorts turned out at the first of the football season, sixteen of these being lettermen. With Coach Shores and Captain Jervis Gordon as leaders, the boys started their work. The team had a very successful year, winning ten games and losing only one and that to Gaffney, S. C. Hickory scored 376 points the whole season while their opponents scored only 28. Hickory kept every team except Rutherfordton and Gaffney from making a single point. Much credit is due to Coach Shores for his hard and successful work in producing one of Hickory High's best teams and the winner of the Western Conference title.

Although at times the team did not show up so well, they managed to have a fairly successful season by winning thirteen games and losing seven. The total points made by the Tornadoes were 514 with Captain Mackorell leading his mates by scoring an even 100 points. The team's shooting average stood at .247, with Carpenter and Haney leading. During the first part of the season the Tornadoes were tied for first place in the South Piedmont Association, but later they dropped and at the end of the season stood at third.
